OPERATIONAL INFORMATION

Combat experience during the Korean War demonstrated to the Soviet Union its need for a short-range air-superiority fighter. The delta-wing MiG-21 met these requirements and through many variants and upgrades has become the world's most used fighter aircraft. It is best remembered as the tenacious foe of the F-4 Phantom during the Vietnam War.

During 1955, the MiG bureau designed the prototype E-50 in an effort to keep structural weight to a minimum for better performance. Multiple prototypes followed before this small, daytime interceptor began flying with frontline Soviet units in the late 1950s. Given the NATO reporting name "Fishbed," the MiG-21 easily matched the performance of Lockheed's F-104 Starfighter. A two-seat trainer version, the MiG-21UM, was dubbed the 'Mongol' by NATO. The MiG-21PF was the second production version built, and had all-weather interception capability. Later variants saw increased fuel capacity and heavier armament, along with better avionics. At the same time, increasingly powerful Soyuz engines were incorporated to compensate for the increasing weight.

Czechoslovakia, the Soviet Union, and China all manufactured the MiG-21, and they were exported to various Soviet satellites during the Cold War. India also produced the type under license until 1988. The Chinese F-7 variant is still in production. The MiG-21 flies with more than 50 air forces today. Several MiG-21s of various versions are owned and flown by private individuals in the United States, and at least one (a MiG-21UM trainer) is owned by a private operator in Australia.

ORIGIN OF THE MiG 21 AT PALM SPRINGS AIR MUSEUM

27 March 2012 was a banner day at the Museum with the delivery of a MiG-21 aircraft. Orchestrated by Dick Hunter, a Museum Volunteer, the MiG-21 arrived on two flatbed trucks - the fuselage on one, the tail and wings on another. As it arrived from Thermal, Dick told the story of his "dream find". He was at the Jacqueline Cochran Airport and there sat this plane - "I just stood there and stared at it for at least 20 minutes". As he looked at the MiG, a man approached and handed him a cell phone with a lady on the line who said she would like to donate it to the Air Museum. The caller was Libuse "Lilly" Hornak, widow of Stefan Hornak, a MiG collector and founding owner of Aviation Museum, Inc. of Thermal.
